What did you like the most about this project?

I liked that we got to do a blog instead of just a paper or a power point or something like that. It was really interesting searching and posting and knowing that other people will read the work you wrote.

I loved how I was in control. I got to pick my topic, I got to write some facts and some of my perspective it wasn't like a research paper, and I loved the fact that we weren't on a strict project we got the chance to change our opinion if we felt differently. I like the concept that we had to find the information ourselves and it was not just handed to us and asked to do something I enjoyed being able to find interesting stories on other women and modern issues in our world today. learning all that new information on asylums I liked how you could insert captions for the picture. I also liked how you could view the posts of others in your group, just not at the same time. I also liked how creating the blog by using the "d20blogs.com" because most of the things needed for a blog was already set up for you. working in the labs I liked learning about the subject I picked in a new way. What I liked most about this project was creating our blogs. I liked making the website look interesting with all the information we found about mental health. I liked posting the information because I felt professional. I liked the way we are published authors. Having the feeling that your blog is on the internet is pretty cool. The topic was great! The research I liked being able to go in depth and find out more about this topic. I liked that it let use king of design the blog by yourself. Also, it was really easy to use. I liked being able to search for the information and be able to apply our knowledge to something besides it just sitting in our mind to be dumped out later. Probably being able to express our thoughts and asking questions What i liked most about this project was that u get to work with your friends. What I liked most about the project was learning new information I like to know new things. I enjoyed the freedom of having something that i can say that i have worked on, designed, and was a large part of creating. I liked learning about my topic. The part I liked most about this project is how cool it was making a blog about a really interesting project. I think i liked learning new things and creating my own blog! Sometimes instead of using pencil and paper i like to put all my thoughts on a website that the world can see. I enjoyed the way all of the info fell together and i began to see how the strings fit. I enjoyed the research that we did. We found out many strange things about mental health care in the nineteenth century and the information we found was very entertaining. Gathering multitudes of information to gather on my blog and, in general just learning very, new and fresh things that I did not know before. The pictures and using the computer. I liked learning about mental health institutes through the years. I was intrigued by mental healthcare at the beginning and it was interesting to learn about it and how it has evolved through the years. The thing I liked most about this project was being able to give my own perspective on the topic we were researching. Finding out info about education I liked how you can write posts based off what you think about. I like the fact that the blog site was easy to use and little to no problems occurred. I liked being able to express my opinion openly without people thinking I was just talking about subject I didn't know about. What I liked most was learning thing that i didn't know before. I liked working with my friends the most. I liked that we were able to learn more about the details of freeing slaves in America and how it has affected use today. I like that we had a lot of freedom to research what we wanted and how much. The thing that I really liked about this project was that I could put things about my opinion and how I felt on my subject which I normally don't or couldn't do with an average research paper. I liked that there weren't many guidelines or rules for this project, and that we could do this project however we wanted to, without worrying about following the guidelines. Also, I liked that we could research however we wanted to in the process. I liked putting my opinion into the blogs. I liked learning about ironic and funny moments in history where people didn't quite get what they wanted. I also liked to take other people through my learning with me and see what hey thought of the posts i made. I enjoyed how we had the freedom to do as we please go wherever our research takes us, not being directed and told what sites to go to. The fact that we were making blogs Expressing my opinions through my research. I liked creating the whole blog I liked this project for many reasons. This I liked this project because it taught me to take research analyze it and organize it into the posts. I liked this project because I had to collaborate and come to an agreement on what to post. We were able to do it with a partner. The thing that I liked the most about this project is the part where we found websites about Prison Reform that gave us a lot, and good information. The thing I liked the most about this project was learning how to use a new resource for a project. I liked learning how to use the blog and it can be a tool that I now know how to use for future projects in school. What I liked most about this project was how it implemented learning in a fun way and how it let me share my opinion and views on our chosen topic. Throughout working on this project I really enjoyed being creative with it. Since the blog is customizable I could make it any way that I wanted it to be and they layout and guidelines were very easy to follow. I liked how I could put a story in my own words and give my opinion and someone actually could comprehend it. I liked about this project because it allowed me to express my learning by putting into a whole new creative way. I liked having a partner to help me when i got confused. I liked doing this project because it was something interesting and new, my favorite part of the project was the fact that I was becoming an author and the researching was also great. I liked how we could customize our very own blogs and really make them stand out and be unique. It also gave me a chance to voice my opinions. What I liked about this project the most was that we got to try a new way of doing our research and presentations. This way also seemed to be a ton more fun. I liked being able to use my own opinion along with the research I found. I liked the fact that I was allowed to choose what I wanted my subject to be and then guide my own self through my research rather than have a parent or teacher breathing down my neck and giving me a subject to research that I don't like at all. I liked working together and solving problems with a group member and being able to share information. I also liked to have a challenge and this project definitely presented a bit of a challenge that I liked a lot. I really like the fact that we got to research our own topic with our partner and the topic was something that we liked. I also enjoyed using the d20blogs cite to put all the information i have into a suitable explanation. All of the information that i have found out. I know know some things that I did not previously learn. that we got to say our opinion about the subject. I don't get to speak my mind all that much. I liked being able to use computers and being able to work in partners. Their were two things that I loved equally about this project. The first one was that I loved learning so much about this topic of mental health treatment. The more research I collected the more I wanted to keep investigating and keep learning more and more. I learned the most in this project than I ever have in any other project in any other class. The second thing I enjoyed was using a blog. I feel this was the most efficient way to do a project. A blog is great for sharing, displaying, and help understand information. i liked knowing the fact that this was a real blog for other people to see. I liked the most, that I got to put info in my own words. I liked how much this project pushed me into new learning techniques and research tactics. It allowed me to learn a lot about the way I think and the way I learn. The thing that I liked about this project is that I could choose my own topic and what questions i asked I could answer on my own blog and not just follow a guide. I liked learning new things that I had no idea about before. I liked showing off my talent and curating what I knew. I could show off and show the knowledge that I have. I liked finding out new information that I didn't know about child welfare including the Orphan Trains, Foster Care, and Adoption. I liked how we could make the blog our own, it didn't have the same thing as every one else. The fact that it was easy to create new posts. I liked the research. I liked finding out history on certain things, where there might be some interesting events. The interesting subject able to grab my interest after i was bored. Being able to use a blog to express something like our project. What I liked about this project is that you were able to do research on a topic that was give or choose and be able to make it in to your own work. I also enjoyed making my own page for information my partner and I fond in to a web site for others to use. I liked being able to use the d20 blogs tool for our project because it had a pre-set up format for you to use. I liked the most about this project was that I could write exactly how I felt on that certain topic and not be getting in trouble for it, or someone telling me that I couldn't put that. I felt like I was able to express what I though very easily and because I was able to do that, I can inform and inspire others. I liked how we did a curation project, this way I could research the different parts of the subject. Also, my work could go wherever my curiosity goes. I got to do it on a topic that interests me. Being able to learn and collect information on my own. Curating this project really got me thinking and allowed me to give my own opinion while staying on topic and informing others. the thing i liked most was that the education reform was an interesting topic to research. the most interesting part was to find out that Asia has good ranks in the ranking but don't have good university's Figuring out how to curate and transform my research into my own. I liked being able to just go out and find information and use it in my project. I liked how i could learn so much from just a simple blog. I really liked everything about this project in general. What really stood out was that I could research what I wanted to and go as far outside the box as I could think of. I also really enjoyed how I could do as much research as I wanted to and be able to continue this project outside of school even tho we finished the project in school. the thing i liked about this project the most was have a partner to help with the project to. I liked how you were able to use social media network connections in your blog and also how you can edit you post after it was posted. I also enjoyed that D20 Blogs had a spell check for when i miss spelled a word It was fun to know how this all got started and know how far we have come. Using what I know and putting it into words What I like the most was that you could give your own opinion about what your topic was and what you researched. How simple it is That we could talk about our opinions on the subject! The thing I liked most about this project is the research. Once I got to one topic I wanted to go on to another one to continue my knowledge. The thing that i liked the most about this project was learning more about this topic was learning so many new things about this because i have members in my family who suffers from some mental issues I liked doing all the research at home and being able to be used as a resource. I liked being able to find out information that i wanted to know and learn things at a good past. What I liked the most about this project is getting to share my opinion and think outside of just the facts. I liked how i had to do everything myself. it taught me about the past reform movements. I liked most learning about something I was interested in and then I got to publish it. Thinking about my thinking. How the making of posts was fun and had lots of thinking involved in them. I liked most researching all of the information then turning into into a little post What I liked the most about this project is that I was able to answer the questions I wanted to on my own, and that I could record my thoughts into posts. Also, that this is something I have never done so it was interesting trying something new. Being on a computer instead of writing all of this by hand. I loved making a blog! I have never made one before, and it was a really interesting way to do a project. So much better than the standard write a 5 paragraph essay and turn it in next week. I liked the fact that my first blog was a school based blog, and that i got to do my blog on a topic i liked very much. I liked looking at the information and tuning it into my own post. I liked that it wasn't just research information and create a paper using the information, I liked being able to give my opinion. I liked connecting all sorts of different topics to one topic. It was something different and I've never used a blog before. I liked how it was not just looking up information and putting into paragraph form.

What did you like the least about this project?

I didn't really enjoy the times where I wouldn't find reliable websites. It took me a long time to find something good to actually use in my blog. The thing I liked least was trying to fill out a citation for every post I made. The thing I liked the least about this project is the timing, if my partner and I had a lot more time we would have done a way better job to improve our blog overall considering the information requirements needed. I have no idea the time we had to do it. I liked mostly everything about this project. Researching and not finding the material. citing sources. I don't really think there was something I liked the least about this project. typing. What I like the least was picking out four websites and talking about what you researched. I found it difficult to word the questions on Google correctly so I wouldn't be sent to Facebook of something. the research and citations. The amount of information that had to be included. What I liked least was that we had to do so much research. me hefting to find all the Information. Nothing. The thing I liked the least about this project was spending a lot of time looking for correct information. Nothing. The thing I liked the least about this project was trying to cite the sections we were writing. Probably the partner aspect of it. I don't think I actually hated anything about this project I was actually really excited to research my topic and learn more about it. I didn't like trying to cite my sources. Many times, the websites we found were very hard to get citation information out of. working. The Photo Stream. citing the page was really annoying because I would find a website that I liked find some fact and put them in my blog then find a blog in the citations of the blog and have to cite the blog I was just on before I forgot to cite it. What I liked least about this project was that it was hard to find exacted information you were looking for. Other than that I really enjoyed the project. I didn't like all of the typing very much. My fingers felt numb afterwards, but I know it was worth telling people what I learned. The thing I liked least about this project was having to cite your sources you used in the blog. This task was not very hard, but was tedious and a little annoying. I didn't like how to set up the site for the blog. The amount of work I did compared to my partner had a great difference. I hope that my grade isn't affected due to her lack of information. We didn't have more time. the fake site I ran into. Sometimes the research was hard because you just couldn't find any good information on the topic you were trying to research about. I didn't have anything that I disliked about it. You couldn't get every thing you were looking for and it got a bit confusing at times. Having to do the research. The thing that I really didn't like about the project was that when everyone was typing, all class period you had to listen to the sound of thousands of little fingers typing away. I didn't like how I couldn't find some specific things. I wasn't able to find a few things I wanted to find out about on my topic. Besides that, I loved this project. I least liked having to find all of the research. I least liked doing the actual research itself. I liked finding out information but the worst part was finding the sources and finding if they were creditable. I did not have fun doing all of the research. It was very confusing getting started, and was sometimes hard to follow. citations!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! I didn't like how we had to have a certain amount of citations and resources and I wish we didn't have to make this for a grade, but something we could do for fun. I didn't like having to come up with new search topics or questions towards the end of the project when we had answered most of the questions we had. It's All Pretty Good No Complaints Here :) I think the worst part of this whole project was trying to log into d20blogs and it giving me trouble. I did not like that we only had a few days to work on it. Nothing. All of the things I did were a lot of fun, for me at least. What I liked the least about this project was trying to think of what to research next. I had trouble thinking of what topic to do research on. Trying to post every day because we didn't have enough time I didn't want to research that much information. The time usage was okay. Other than that this project was good. I pretty much liked all of it. I was doing a lot work and so was the girl I was working with, but the third person wasn't doing anything and barely posted anything. I had to a lot more work because I didn't want the blog looking bad. What I least liked about the project was the citing of sources. Of course this is necessary and I know I will be doing it for the rest of my life. Citing sources is very important for any type of research, but I don't like doing it. Just a personal preference. The project was fun, so finding something that was my least favorite was hard. I guess citing the sources was the most time consuming, making it my least favorite. I didn't like how I had to flip through some many sources that were either irrelevant or with little information. I didn't like how I could only stay on one topic for this project. I wanted to continue on with my research in other topics. I did not like that citing my sources took so long. I thought it was about 2 or 3 days too long. I was starting to board with it and was feeling it would never end. Probably citing. I know you have to site, but at the same time, my partner and i forgot multiple times that we needed to cite our pictures and posts. Having to worry about formatting. The thing I liked the least about this project was doing the research and finding a cite that I really liked but then finding out that it wasn't a reliable source. The irrelevant and nonsense information i found on websites when i searched facts on my topic. I did not like having to work on my own it was not very enjoyable. reasearching I didn't like that we only had a few days to do this, I wish it were longer. Siting even though it is very important! i disliked finding many dead ends, and disappointing conclusions to my research. Researching was what I liked the least about this project. I got stuck on what to research and didn't have many question about further information to look up. However, I managed but I didn't like the researching side of this project. Citing my sources, just because it slows down my research. I disliked this project because it was hard to find credible and reliable sources. It was also hard to find something that me and my partner agreed on. Most sites had the same information so it was hard to expand on the topic. The part that I disliked most about this project had to of been the part where we got stuck on finding good websites about Prison reform. That is what I disliked the most about this project. How all my group members could not edit one post at the same time. That would of come in handy. The only thing i would of liked to do differently would be given more time to learn even more about the topics. I liked the least, that I had to finish on my own time. probably having to site everything you type into your blog I didn't like how i kept finding the same information despite searching various things. What I didn't really like about this was that it required a lot of attention to detail and quite a bit of it organizational pieces. I really enjoyed doing this project. There were not a lot of things that I did not like. Maybe, if we would do this again I would like it if we can do it on any topic. More serious topics, but something that we can really be passionate about so that every single person would want to do this. I feel like if we had our own choice of exactly what we wanted to do then so many gets would get creative and inspire and inform so many more people. Finding the pictures because of

wikipedia I didn't like how we each had to make a new post every time we were on a different topic. I also didn't like how you couldn't change the way the topics were organized. For instance, I wanted a certain topic to be at the top but I couldn't change where it went That I couldn't find some of the information that I wanted. How sometimes you would get stumped and had a hard time finding more information on certain areas. Although I liked the blog, d20 blogs was at times a little annoying to operate. It was extremely aggravating to post in pictures and size them. There was nothing that I did not like about this project and our studies. What I didn't quite enjoy the most about this project would've been when we first started and didn't have quite enough sense of knowledge about what we were exactly doing for this project and didn't know what I was supposed to do and how to do it. I did not like curating the sites I found I didn't really like how everything had to be super precise all of the time, sometimes you forgot to do one little thing and your whole project was affected by it, so you had to go back and fix the problems. I also would have liked to go deeper into more detail on some of the subjects that I couldn't. Citing all my work auto correct was not there I didn't like going into depth of a topic, I like to get the main idea The categorizing I didn't like learning about all these consequences that alcohol had on the people who drank it, and what happened to them. I did not like the in text citations that we were required to write. nothing really. I found it very interesting and entertaining. I did not like typing in the D20 program and I thought it had some issues, I would have much rather typed in Microsoft Word. One of my group members wasn't very cooperative. The research and citing them correctly I had to make a blog. I didn't like the time I spent on just one post Probably the fact that we had to use D20 blogs, because now only students from D20 can comment not other students in another state or country. I didn't have a thing that I absolutely didn't like during this project. There was A LOT of research to do though. The thing I didn't like about the project that you couldn't automatically save the post that you made. The fact that we had to categorize our posts. I didn't like converting my research into the paragraphs for the people to understand. There was only one thing that I didn't enjoy, and that was there spell check wasn't the best and they didn't have a grammar check with the program. having to do the project and having to do so many steps just to get the blog set up. I didn't like how we didn't have more time to research our problem in depth to learn more. The thing that I liked least about this project is that you could only choose from some of the reforms out of a bunch of reforms.

How do you define a curator?

Someone who learns about things but then really has to think about them. I would define a curator as someone who is investigating a topic in detail. Also, someone who continues researching the topic with further questioning they have. To me I think that a curator is someone who looks over historical things and researches them. A curator is someone that takes their time to look at research and think of it in their own way and make it work that they find. A smart soul that knows what they are doing and does almost all of it right and even all of it and that is what a curator is to me. A curator is someone who researches a topic not to gain facts, but rather because they have a genuine interest in the topic and are curious. A curator is someone who researches artifacts and helps the reader/tourist/guest understand what they are seeing. He must connect with his audience and make sure they actually can understand and process what they are being shown.

I define a curator as someone who gathers all the information they can on a topic, and they make connections and add their own thoughts. A person who collects information and then puts them into the right categorize. Some one who can present information in a entertaining way and who is knowledgeable about the topic. A curator i s a person that takes info and makes it easier to understand by other people. Your opinion on information you researched. Curating is gathering research and then showing and describing it to people and adding your own personal opinion to it to create a beautiful work of art. you show passion to show others how amazing the topic truly is. On the other hand, research is just gathering data from resources. However, curating takes research and goes above and beyond. a person that does research I define a curator as a person who takes control of a certain activity or hobby. a keeper or collector of something. Someone who goes into the details of something to find of its "back story" A curator is someone who takes information and makes it come alive, giving it a more human quality than what was originally there. A curator is way cooler than a researcher. Instead of just finding information they take the time to analyse sources and get the most information that they can juice out. Someone who takes knowledge and further explains it in their own words, thoughts, and feelings. They put meaning into the knowledge. I define a curator as a person that researches something that they are interested and excited about and then gets others interested and excited about it too. They show it to the public on a website or a museum. To express what your here to talk about a curator is someone who makes a presentation about research fun for all audiences. A curator is a person who reports or writes on a combination of opinions and facts to express their opinions on a topic or subject. A curator is someone defines artwork or a piece of information for the public and makes it interesting for numerous types of people to enjoy. I define a curator being someone who discovers something, researches it and becomes part of their research. Some one who first gathers information, and then puts it in their own words to teach others about the same topic. In my definition, a curator is someone who creates emotion and feeling about something that most people would just think of as information and blunt research that doesn't mean much. A curator makes you feel as tho you are in that moment or are feeling what that specific author or creator was feeling. Lastly, a curator is someone who allows you to gain a greater feeling and sense of knowledge, going under the skin about what this piece of information truly means. someone who takes their research and defines it and expresses their emotion through it. A person that tells you about something at a museum. I define a curator as someone who pays very close attention to detail and is more sleuth like when it comes to researching something. They are also very meticulous when it comes to getting things done. To look at all different types of thing and connect them together with your own opinion. A person who organizes their work and puts their own thoughts into the work. Someone who makes information less boring A curator is a person who gives information and tells it subjectively. The curator's job is to give new meaning to objects that may seem overused or displayed. One who is very passionate about their topic and knows everything about it, from the smallest detail to the most obvious thing possible. A curator is someone who looks at facts and makes them their own, like putting their own knowledge into information. A person who organizes and keeps everything up to date someone who organizes information A curator is a person who likes to tell people about something and what they think about it or where it all started from. In other words I suppose that they are people who do what they like and like what they do. A curator is someone who informs others about a topic and then gives their thoughts or opinions on the subject. Someone who takes the time and effort to find information, comment on it, and share it publicly and is not embarrassed to suffer if any consequences for their brave comment and opinions on said topic that they did. A curator is someone who collects information and puts in into their own writing and adds their perspective. I would define a curator as someone that tells people what they think about the website that they read. A curator is someone who paints with words. They describe what they are talking about so well that it doesn't even have to be there for you to see it. Somebody who describes, memorizes, and lets people know what the item is about, what it means, and how it makes people feel. A curator takes information from a site, analyzes it, and organizes his writing about the research. I would say a curator is someone who puts back the history into something tries to find the story or background from where or what it is truly from. A person who gathers information then tells others about it and gives their opinion on the topic. A curator is a person who tell people information with their own personal opinions in such a way that it makes the audience want to know more. To me a curator is someone who gathers information from reliable sources and use that information to go in depth to describe how they feel and how the process this information. A person who teaches people about things through pictures and interesting thoughts. Someone who puts there perspective on research they found. Someone who is not afraid to express their opinion. A curator is someone who collects sources and voices their opinions and feelings about the sources. Someone who is familiar with a certain event that too place in history and is willing to talk about it to inform. A curator is a person who is job is to describe in thorough depth about a topic. A curator is a person that describes what the story is behind something. organize a large group of iteams A curator is a person that describes something to an audience for a living. He/She has to describe things to a different group of people every time so they have to change the way they describe it. A curator is someone who not only understands something but can also describe it with passion and make others feel inspired to do things that they may be passionate about. The person that is like the researcher. A person who talks to the listener/listeners about a certain subject or piece of work and explains in detail about the subject. A curator is a person who provides their own perspective and how they view that certain topic. I provided info that I found on a website and put it my perspective. a curator is a person that uses others fact and puts them in there own words. They cite it and don't plagiarize but they use facts and expressing their opinion A curator is someone who not only tells about the past of something, but puts a story behind it and finds a way to make sure you don't forget it. They also help you see the story and put yourself in their shoes. I would define a curator a person that knows his material and can give an opinion on it to an audience. an organizer I think it means describing things in a way that is not just about seeing or learning its about actually understanding and being able to use words to make people fully understand. Someone who has a lot of knowledge on a subject, and presents in an interesting understandable way. Reading information and then turning int into your own words adding your opinion and then writing about it. a curator is a blogger pretty much. Someone who gives information on something but instead of moving on right after they also tell of how they see the information. They are also an expert on the information. A curator is someone that sorts art or other work based on age or other aspects. They also give their own opinion about the art to other people A curator is someone who is a collector of something, for example a museum owner. a person who takes information and explains it and makes it insereesting A curator to me is a person that finds research, knows his/her topic, and is able to explain there topic to others. some one who presents an idea or event and gives output finding research and adding your opinion to it My definition of a curator someone who pays attention to detail to a certain topic to explain in great detail to others. A person who finds a some what amount of useful information and makes it their own, very useful information. A person who gives out a peace of information and them giving there thoughts, feelings, and opinions. a person who just skims things Someone who takes information and puts into their own words, but also adds how they felt A curator is someone who takes care of a museum, zoo, or something along those lines, but i don't think that was the point of this project. I think it was to act like curators, we had to explain our thinking, explain our research, and organize our thoughts into a presentable fashion. a person that has a lot of knowledge and shares that with people including his own perspective A curator is someone who gathers information and is able to consider the audience and express how they feel from that information to give a more heartfelt feeling. I define a curator by someone who is so knowledgeable about a piece if info that they don't need it there to ex plane how it looks of feels. Someone who researches a subject then writes there opinion about it. i think of a curator as a narrator or a informer that gives their opinion and facts. something that somebody writes I would define a curator as someone who uses their heart and soul into what they are doing, When that person really digs deep and takes the time to put everything that they have into it. They use their creativity, passion, heart, excitement, and use all of that to make beautiful work. Emotion is something that they put into to make their work so amazing. They do not just collect information and stick to the guidelines but they really go above and beyond into everything that they do, Someone who goes through information and finds what they think is credible or that they want other people to see. A curator is someone who takes you through a journey of learning where you can express what you think about what your learning. a keeper or custodian of a museum or other collection. A person that takes information from history and tries to piece together the puzzle making the story of what happened. A person with imagination and kindness. I define a curator as the person in charge and make sure that everything is correct. A curator is one who puts information in their own words and sharing it in their own words. A curator is somebody who makes learning more interesting. They show off ther knowledge they have by turning it into an interesting story. A curator is someone truly engaged in what they are teaching others. How I define curator is one who takes care of history such as paintings or a 1986 ford and knows every inch of every atom of this ancient relics which may never be truly recreated Someone who knows about the subject they are discussing so much that they have their own personal opinion about it. In my response, i think a curator is somebody who digs deep into a time in history to find out what happened. Then, show probably thousands of people what that particular peice of history felt to them and draw a picture in the community's minds. it is a person who has a museum or a keeper of a museum. A curator is the person that researches x object and decides if it goes in to x place. I am very organized about my posts and about my information. To me a curator is when you find research on a certain topic than go more in dept on the topic and give your opinion on how you feel about your topic. A curator someone who puts something together and then explains what they think and what it means. I define a curator as some one who creates something off of research. A curator is a person that assesses research and adds their opinion to it.

List one or two things that stand out in what you've learned.

it was the base for the foster care system Every thing i leared was interesting but the two most interesting things is the "treatments that were given in the asylums and the children that lived there. One thing I learned that stranded out was the people behind this the child's health association sister Irene the priests the agents each one had a hand in placing these poor orphans. Prisons and mentally ill asylums. I learned about the sad stories of the past. That most deported immigrants have already started there lives and businesses. Probably that women were treated like doormats, instead of getting that chance to show what they intended in changing in the world. I now have a greater understanding on how mental healthcare has grown and is continuing to grow. I also learned that even if you find a site and it doesn't look as though it has valuable information, it does but you have to dig deep. One of the biggest things that really stuck out to me was that all of Earth's history, based on separate countries, is that they all tie together or are a cause and effect of one another. the evolution of orphan trains Women were treated like property and not aloud to say or do much of anything. Many of the women were willing to help even if ii wouldn't go as planned.

1. Writing a blog can be difficult if you are working with a partner. 2. Being a curator requires creativity and critical thinking. One of the things that I have learned through the experience of the project is the difference between curating and research (see previous question). The second thing I have learned that stands out is the cruelty people bestowed upon the mentally ill patients. I had no idea before now. It was surprising and sad what they did to them. It was outstanding to me. 1) Woman went through a lot to get their rights 2) Woman were really mentally abused by men because the men made the women believe they were better than them. 1. the deinstitutionalization movement 2. the York Retreat What stood out to me most was the treatment of patients in the 1800s. I knew that care was bad back them, but I didn't know that it was as bad as it was. I never imagined prisoners being chained to something or repeatedly plunged into ice cold water. Because the treatments of the 1800s surprised me so much, it stood out to me the most. The one that stood out from what I learned is making my first blog. I never made a blog before and making an educational blog was something I really haven't considered in doing. Another thing that stood out to me was how I was able to learn a lot about my topic and use the internet to my advantage. The methods they used in the 1800s. Like the chair. I found it interesting what the treatment actually was. How much information we can put into a small paragraph. The way they treated black people. That police are now targeting people who look like they're not form America, and that Detroit was so segregated 1. I learned how mental hospitals were in the 1800's 2. I learned how they changed to present day how children were treated back then John Dewey went to three colleges. How badly people were treated back then. The different laws that can affect people more than others for immigration Self Guidance I learned the big difference between a curator and someone who just gathers research. They allow for input on their ideas and thoughts. 1.) I learned that Women's rights dates all the way back to they 1800s 2.)I leaned that it is mostly only the poor countries that don't have woman's rights and that women's rights causes numerous other problems that aren't as common here. how much we use technology today That people in mental hospitals were treated horribly. A project doesn't have to be stale and boring, it can be fun, you can really care about what you are writing. Women gaining the right to vote after they started protesting took quite a long time. Technology is used a lot and makes our country better The main idea of what i learned is how to curate. That prohibition was to protect families from alcohol, and that marijuana and alcohol prohibition was very similar. That not all kids go to a family that some kids go to a farm family! I couldn't find anything about children punishments. I learned that grammar are an important thing and prisons were quite insane back then. Before there was An American Dream there was An American Hope. Modern day racism is rising in quantity nearly half of the people pulled over in a vehicle by a policeman are Latin-Americans or African-Americans. What prison reform is and how to blog. One thing that stood out to me is that doing work/research can be enjoyable and so that you want to do. The second thing that I learned was that putting research into a blog or other form of outline can make your project stand out to everyone.

1. That men were also admitted to the hospital not only women
2. how they were being treated in the hospital's

That I found out about other races, but mainly African-Americans, were being pulled over on the roads just for being another race other than white. One of the things that stood out while I was creating my blog was all of the choices and forms that you could use to make your blog. That mental health was a unknown thing back in the 1800's. The Prohibition was a waste of our governments time and money. One thing that stood out to me was that there was a long struggle to African Americans earning the right to vote, when today its understood as something always guaranteed, and taken for granite. Also that there was so much I didn't know in the topic. Saudi women are not just sitting by like I thought they were, they are protesting and fighting for their rights. I learned that prisons have changed a lot over time. Dirty prison cells changed to clean cells. Hard work is not mandatory today. There are special hospitals for people with mental illnesses but back then, everyone was in the same prison.

1. That you are always are in control of what you say don't let anyone tell you anything different.
2. that these topics are super important to our history.

I was surprised that in some states police officers were also racial profilers. I also learned what racial profiling was and how much it would affect our modern society. The fact that more people actually drank more after the 18th amendment was official! Also that when people lost there jobs they had to choose between getting a lower paying job, or becoming a criminal to support there families.

1. how mental health care has changed
2. why women were the main targets for being institutionalized

I learned that when you are making a project or giving information, you can make it nteresting and exciting to look at and see. the reasons people got put in the asylums. Lobotomy was the dumbest thing ever. I have no clue why anyone would think that could work. It killed someone and they kept on using it. That was the biggest thing that stood out in what I learned. I have learned that when researching a topic you need to be very specific in order to get better and more detailed results. -Title IX -How women began to have rights. One thing that stood out that i learned is how the patients where treated. One thing stood out and spoke to my heart deep down, that one thing was that on-third of slaves made the whole population of the Southern U.S. back then. The fact that mentally ill were treated very badly and that children were treated badly as well. I learned about how desperate people were to get to America undetected. Only 7 years ago was it made a law that women got equal pay as men. How much technology has changed, and the first time women were allowed to got to school. I have learned that curating is not as easy as it sounds and that researching and finding answers to your own questions is really fun.

1. Learning about what an immigrant is.
2. How immigrants come to the U.S. These were both important things.

children were stuck in the same prison as the adults, and that the mentally disabled were beat because they were disabled. They drilled holes in peoples heads and they thought that the moon was the cause of the illnesses. education was a huge movement in the 1800's. Doing my research I've learned many different things about my topic "Mental Health". One is that In the United States the first mental health facility was all the way back in the 1700's. The second one is that curing and the way that they treated the mentally ill back in the 1700's-1900's was just wrong poor and sad to me as a 21st century learner. One thing that I have learned is that it is okay to be creative all the time, to use that into everything you do. For me, I am more of a musical, creative type person, so sometimes school can be tough for me because we don't really do anything that I can be creative with. I find that when we do certain projects that are more hands on and that have a more creative way of learning, that's when I learn my best. I would think to myself sometimes that I had to stick to exactly what the prompt said and not go any further or bend it in anyway, because I didn't want to get marked down or get in trouble for expressing how I felt about that. Or even using my own way of learning to understand that. But, by doing this project I learned that using what you know and being creative is one of the best things that you can do. People will see how much you put into it and feel that passion you have. Even though school doesn't always do things the way that I would like them to, I can always use the way that I learn and be creative with everything I do! People will see that, learn from it and hopefully be inspired. You don't need a textbook or a teacher to learn. What really stood out for me was the fact that parents would ditch there kids and throw them on the streets to scavenge for themselves. Also, i thought it was cool how one man went to New York, saw the children on the streets struggling and formed the Child Welfare Reform. the things that stand out to me is how people from back then thought about others with mental illness The two things that stood out to me in this project is that what education was like before Horace mann and does using ipads make education easier for kids Some things that I learned from doing this project were, using my time wisely because there were so many small details that you couldn't leave any of them out or you wouldn't have enough time to get them in. In addition there was not just the subject we were researching but also lots of small subjects tied into it to give more of a history to our subject prison reformation. Throughout history women and people of other races were treaty lowly. One thing that stands out that I have learned is all the information about Bethlem Royal Hospital and the sheer cruelty of the actions that went on inside of it that were directed against the mentally ill. I learned so many disturbing facts that really outlined just how much Mental Health Care was in desperate need of reform. *lots of women around the world are illiterate *women having to be fully covered in public *women must be escorted by then they leave the house 1) that women were superior then out of know ware at the bottom. 2) that women were treated as house maids and property instead of a normal person. 200,000 orphans were transported and that these children had only one supervisor every 40-50 kids 1). That I don't like partner projects 2). That people who didn't even have mental problems were admitted to the asylum We are really conflicted about technology in schools. The one thing that really stood out was that women were unfairly thrown into Mental hospitals because the husband basically just wanted them too. Another thing that stood out was that the majority of the population in mental hospitals consisted of women. I've learned that you don't have to side with other people's opinions. You can just go with your own. Self reflection is important. Technology is a major impact on our learning, 20 or 30 years ago students would of never done a project like this one instead they would have to write boring essays. But too much technology can be a bad thing like how kids can plagiarize way more now than they use to or TV distracts students from doing their home work. Women where put in an asylum for small things. I learned a lot about the "stop and frisk" policy there was nothing that stood out to me because every thing was really interesting and not really comparable to each other. Something that stood out on what I have learned was that we could create a website full of information that we have learned and is accurate and post it on the web and almost anyone can access it.

1. Education in 3rd world countries
2. Education in the classroom

I've learned about really deep details involved in prohibition I've also learned about why prohibition occurred and some of the background stories behind it. The mentally ill and Dorothea Dix. People were sent to insane asylums for the stupidest reasons. One or two things that really stand out on what I have learned would be on how women are truly treated. If you think about it, everyone imagines that the world is good and dandy, but through this research, I have discovered that not all women have it good and dandy. Women now and during the Women's Protesting for Voting Rights back in the 1800's have been treated harsh and unequal and that needs to change. One thing that has stood out to me was the fact that they took so many homeless and neglected children and took them to farms to work. Another thing that stood out to me was the fact that if we didn't have orphan trains then we wouldn't have foster care or adoption.

1. people fought until the death to get their civil rights freedom. I have learned that prohibition had a strong start but sooner or later it would have ended quickly. Also, that many things could have been learned from prohibition and might have made the world a little bit safer. Something that stands out in what I've learned is what the women went through to get their right to vote. Also, how much effort they put into convincing the government to give them equal rights. Not only that, but also how long it took for government to finally become convinced to give women their own rights.

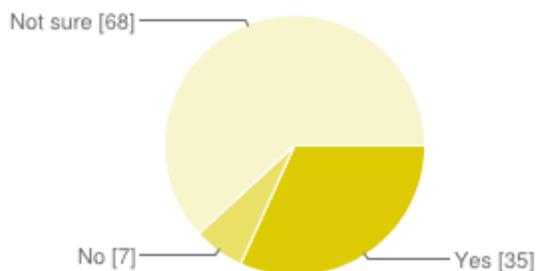

One thing that stood out in what I learned

1. Mental hospitals were brutal.
2. Mental health is going down hill. I have learned the reasons or excuses (as I call them) of why Mexicans are illegally crossing the border. Old treatments, new treatments. Something that stood out was that the groups who were against alcohol were normally middle class women due to their husbands taking violent actions on them when intoxicated. This shows that alcohol abuse and abuse when under the influence was happening long before it became a big issue today. The internet doesn't always provide useful information. Mental health patients were often thrown in jail. They were also beaten and left with no clothes or heat. I have learned many things through this project, but the two most important would be that you can't make someone learn if they don't want to and that the best pieces of literature come as a result of people's interest and care in a subject. I also learned that it is okay to put opinions into your blogs, but you must have facts to support that opinion. One thing that I have learned in my research is that in North Korea, THREE generations of your family, meaning your family, your children, nieces, nephews, and their children would go into a concentration camp, where they would most likely be executed in front of you, if you seemed to be an enemy of the state, which is actually very easy. Another thing is that there is inequality still in the United States, ranging from gender inequality to economic problems. One thing that stood out to me was that Benjamin Rush basically started

Will you continue to investigate your topic?

What are you still wondering about?

I was starting to research Nellie Bly and I didn't get to finish, so I am still curious about her. When did women first start wanting to be treated fairly. Why did men hate the idea so much of women

Yes	35	32%
No	7	6%
Not sure	68	62%

gaining the right to vote.
 What I'm still wondering about is why hasn't Racial Profiling been abolished

yet. * Do teacher's need to be in students personal lives? * Education in developing countries. * Life of a student in third world country * Poverty in schools. * Funding in Education System * Education outside of the classroom * Online school * Technology in 3rd world country schools. How the patients in mental hospitals were treated. Not the treatments they got, how they were treated by doctors and other patients. I still wonder about how people died in the mental institutions, which was my topic. Nothing What are the different methods of getting to America undetected. Technology vs. Older stuff. I did a post about physical books vs. e-books and I found out interesting information. Why do some men think they are above women? not a thing What I'm still wondering is what made women want to start protesting not just because they were tired of men ruling them but a real answer. Also what else can I do with this blog that we discovered? Why they started the Prohibition Well now because of a comment I am wondering about how rich and poor people were treated differently. The stories of people who were in the hospitals I still want to go deeper with the mafia and crime in the temperance movement because that really got my interest and i didn't get a chance to talk much about it. I am still wondering about the boxes that cover the faces of the patients are meant to do. Why is america so protective about having immigrants in the country. How many children could be taken off of the Orphan train and placed in a home at one time and how many per house? what happened between those two times. What i'm wondering is what where all the different types of treatments they used on patients and did they use any machinery to help them? What John Dewey's kids are like. What else did Dorothea Dix do. I am still wondering if methods of treating patients in the 1800s were different in different parts of the world. I also wonder if different religions treated mental illness differently. If they did, I also am curious about where they are today in terms of progress regarding mental healthcare. I have wondered about a lot of information which would take a long time to write so I have a lot of things on my mind regarding why am I researching this? Why did this happen? And so on with all of my thoughts What are prisons like today. I am still wondering about how African Americans did not get caught in the Underground Railroads. I am still wondering how there are seven million illegal immigrants from Mexico who have a job. Shouldn't they have been caught and deported? Modern mental health facilities I am not really wondering, I just want to learn more about the topics. I will next go into depth on the asylums that were established for the mentally ill all around the world. What cultures and religions have been more accepting to women's rights? Why did it take so long for women to gain rights since they've always been important? Why were men always know as the superiors if women brought them into the world? Why the 14th Amendment was passed, and about the little details in all of the events. Not really WONDERING about anything but I' am wanting to look into the history some more because its interesting I do not have a lot of things that I wonder about. Although I would like to go further in research on the women's sex trafficking, education rights, bullying, and all of the things that go on that a lot of people do not really think about and don't know that it is going on. I want to learn as much as I can so I can be well educated on these subjects and inspire many other people around me. People my age and even adults. mentally ill asylums. I am still wondering why President Woodrow Wilson didn't want to make alcohol illegal. I am still wondering why these women were against alcohol? Did something happen to them personally to make them hate it so much? nothing Why did they abandon many of the asylums. How did the parents feel about leaving their kids? How far would the kids go to survive?? I am wondering about what changed all of the sudden for people to think that drugs and alcohol were fine until one day they decided every drug is bad and should be illegal. I am still wondering that why does Asia not have a lot of good universities but still rank high in the rankings I am still wondering about why women were being treated poorly by men? It was hard to find information about my essential question. (Are prescription drugs involved in prohibition?) so I am still lacking some information about that topic which I would like to figure out. not sure Are prisons worse than insane asylums? I still have a few questions about women in the insane asylums. I would like to know more about more reasons why they were put into the asylums. Where or when the foster parents went to pick up and adopt orphans. Did they have to pay to adopt them? I am still wondering about when will there be a day when racial profiling will end. If racial profiling would come to an end, then maybe there wouldn't be as many wars that occur. Why is there so much hate in the world/ Why won't people try to find peace? I'm really am wondering if robots will ever take over teaching students. When will they start learning that mental illness is not a religious punishment, but a disease. Nothing really I would like to know more on how the brain works but besides that nothing. What Prohibition changed our world today. Modern women today struggling to still gain their freedom and women who were in insane asylums. I wonder about some of the stories of the patients that lived in the asylums. I am still wondering on some specific ways to figure out how the world can finally become equal for women and how we can all live in peace between each other and not make assumptions about one another. Whether or not children were put in asylums and treated with the same cruelty. I'm still wondering more of the process it took to reform the prisons up to now. I want to know some additional changes prisons have made to become better. what crime caused what sentence. Is NAMI a successful organization? If people just put people in insane asylums to get rid of them? What happened to the orphanages in New York Why exactly did men think they had the upper hand in the world. nothing really why was this project super necessarily about these certain topics and not about anything else. I'm still wondering what really made the whole racial profiling thing get to a big subject like it is today. Why they drilled holes in the heads If there are any rights women are still fighting for today. How long the process is to come to the U.S due to felonies or some other crime you've committed. Why the reason why children and mentally ill were treated so horribly Did the civil rights movement affect the American wars? Children Punishments: how they punished them. Were any of the operations influenced by religion? Who were the people that worked in the mental health institutions? Why were they chosen? Why did the people who work there take such little care of the patients? I am still wondering about who made these changes and why that person was so involved in the reformation of prisons. I wonder what the world would be like today if we were still under the 18th amendment. Also if the government has ever thought of having another prohibition and how it would affect the 21st century compared to the 1800's. I am still wondering, mainly, what treatments, if any went on inside of the Bethlem Royal Hospital. Were they just as cruel as the conditions of the Hospital itself? I am still curious about many things on prohibition. For example, I wonder what the out come of marijuana will be in the U.S and what will be prohibited in the future. I also want to know more about children's role in the Temperance Act, if they had any. Also, I want to learn more about the medical uses of marijuana and if marijuana has long term effects on the body that we are not yet aware of. Those are just some of the many things I am still curious on about prohibition. I am still wondering about how the government got involved. I think it would be interesting to see what actually convinced them to finally give women the right to vote and have equal rights. The government is what made the 19th Amendment, so I wonder what made them finally agree with the women. The individual stories of the riders of the train I am still wondering if there is more that we could go in depth on or is there anything more we can learn about our project. I'm still wondering about how men were treated in asylums, were they treated more harshly? How many laws are in the immigration conduct How they are connected? How the presidents have influenced the drug war. what will mental health care look like in the future? the 1808 asylum act I'm still wondering about my family's history in slavery and that will be my future research. why do people still discriminate? I am still wandering about who set up the trains and who drove them that is information I did not find. How they thought they could cure them. How did people think of alcohol back then? What would it be like now if they didn't stand up for women? Where would we be know? How men took women gaining rights and what the effect on women was when they fought for their freedom!? How metal health can change for the better. More ways technology is affecting our learning. How people felt in the mental hospital and what they were thinking. I would like to see what their point of view was on it.

Anything else you want to share?

This was pretty fun. I hope you have a spectacular day! no I hope your book turns out well! I cant wait to see it on the shelves I think that these blogs are awesome and that I think I might make another. I reccomend that anyone should use these. Nope Ummmm I hope this helps. :) Have a nice day! NOPE! I first thought that this project would be boring and I would just research the topic and may not be able to fully understand it, but it just so happened the exact opposite happened. I got into this topic and was able to relate to parts of it! I got lot of great information and want to learn more about it. Not really no. nope. It was a lot of fun. I like how well all the kids did in the different topics No. This was a great opportunity and I'm sure Mrs. Inloes' future history classes eill enjoy this project as much as i did! I have nothing else to share Our time spent in D20 blogs has helped us learn more about a singel topic and share it with the world This was a very interesting topic to research I would like to say that i would want to use blogs for more other projects that we do in the future. THIS WAS SO FUN!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! I LOVED this project. I think this project is a great idea for a lot of grade levels. Many of us learn the information and then dump it out of our minds in a month or two. This project helped put what we already knew and what we learned to use in other ways besides making a boring poster, filling out a worksheet, or taking a test. no, i am sorry, but no No Nope. No all all of the questions I answered are pretty much all I hVe to share on the subject. Thank you This project was really fun to me I would like to do it again. nothing in particular Not really. When i was 5 my dad stepped on my cat and it got squashed. (I don't like cats ;) none Nope I would like to share that this project has benefited me in a very positive way and that I will carry what I learned from this project in to high school and just in general incorporate it into my life. For example, a daily blog about how my day was for my life. Overall this Project was amazing! Thanks to Mrs. White we were able to use helpful resources that helped make our blogs possible! This project was fun for me. D20 blogs will be something that I use for the rest of my days in school and if i work on a computer in the future. I had a fantastic time creating this blog. It was no doubt one of the funnest ones this year. This project was different from what we usually do and i thought it was pretty fun. Nope. if we had more time and we were more use to the d20blogs it would be a lot eaiser. No thank you! education branch's to many events. nope I thought this was a unique way to do research, I would like to do it again sometime. I loved this project and for any teacher I would definitely recommend them giving an assignment like this to the students. I don't think so! Nope :D This project has taught me a lot, and I hope to have another project similar to it. Nope! The project was really fun! Perfect for me being independent (I didn't work with anyone) and it also taught me a little bit about what my Mom went to college for. (She wants to a a psychologist) No there is nothing else I would like to share about the orphan trains. I really enjoyed doing this project. It got me excited to come to school and work on this because I was passionate about it. It was a great way to express what I thought about it and to also work together with my group and see what their opinions were on this.
